SLU Tracks Graduation Rates by Gender to Close Gaps

Saint Louis University monitors the likelihood of women graduating compared to men through its institutional data systems. The University Registrar's Office maintains official student records, including enrollment, academic progress, and graduation data, which can be disaggregated by sex. The Information Systems and Technological Service Department (ISTSD) supports this process by managing the university's information systems and generating the reports used to analyze graduation outcomes by gender.

The results are used to identify any disparity between women's and men's graduation rates and to guide the university's initiatives for closing gaps and keeping all students on track to complete their degrees.
